	6	Submissions by MR BORN	6	From there I'll turn to the topic of admissibility,
	7	MR BORN: Thank you, Mr Chairman. As I announced	7	the admissibility of the supposed excess of mandate
	8	yesterday, "the floor" is a broad expression. In	8	claims raised by the Government in these proceedings.
	9	fact, I will be speaking from the table on this side.	9	After that I'll turn to generally applicable
	10	I'd like to begin by thanking my colleagues at	10	principles of law and provide an overview of the
	11	Wilmer Cutler. I am the one who, for better or for	11	well-settled principles of finality and res judicata and
	12	worse, will be doing the speaking today, but the words	12	the standards of legal proof which those give rise to.
	13	that I say are the product of a huge effort I think	13	In some sense I shouldn't need to do that, but given the
	14	the chairman said a herculean effort by many people,	14	Government's arguments both yesterday and previously,
	15	many people other than me, and most of the credit for	15	I'm afraid that I need to.
	16	what I say, for better or for worse, goes to them and	16	Finally I will look to the various individual excess
	17	not to me.	17	of mandate claims, purported excess of mandate claims
	18	The credit also goes to the PILPG, our co-counsel in	18	that the Government has raised; its so-called procedural
	19	this case, who contributed enormously, and of course the credit goes to the SPLM/A as well, which was enormously	19 20	substantive mandate and mandatory criteria claims. I'm
	20		20	not sure exactly how many those are; I think Professor Pellet said it's 10, 11 or 12, but it doesn't
	21	helpful in preparing the submissions that we've made and what I will say today.	21 22	really matter. It does sort of matter for me, frankly,
	22 23	I'd also like to thank the Tribunal. It's	23	because I have to figure out what they are and address
	24	a distinct honour and privilege to appear before you	23	them, and I will do my best. If I fail to address one
	25	today. It's a distinguished tribunal in every respect	25	of them, I'm sure we will come back to it in rebuttal.

Throughout the negotiations the SPLM/A insisted on the right of the Abyei Area inhabitants, the Ngok Dinka people, to determine for themselves whether to join the south or remain in the north. Ultimately the parties agreed to an innovative and carefully designed mechanism for resolving their disagreements over Abyei. The agreement was set forth in the Abyei Protocol and the Abyei Annex, both entered into as part of the CPA at the end of 2004. The provisions of the Abyei Protocol and the Abyei Annex were subsequently elaborated in the Terms of Reference. These three documents included both substantive provisions recording the parties' agreement on the	5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20	Abyei Protocol provides for an Abyei referendum in which the Ngok Dinka and other residents of Abyei will be entitled to vote in a free democratic referendum regarding the future of the area. The substantive definition of the Abyei Area was central to the parties' agreement in the CPA. Professor Crawford referred yesterday to this being a crunch point, and the Government has said that the definition of the Abyei Area was "key to the settlement" and "the most difficult and painstaking exercise of the whole peace process". In particular Article 1.1.2 was important because it defined the people who would be eligible to vote in the Abyei referendum, the residents of Abyei. He was called back to active duty after he had retired to head the United States Embassy in Liberia; hardly an easy task at the time. It is no overstatement to describe Ambassador Petterson as one of the world's most distinguished and experienced authorities on contemporary African diplomacy and politics. Among other things, he was for three years, from 1992 to 1995, the US ambassador to the Sudan. The next expert was Dr [Douglas] Johnson, the United Kingdom-nominated expert. Dr Johnson teaches African history at Oxford University and has 40 years of research experience on Sudan. Among other things, Dr Johnson was the author of "The Root Causes of Sudan's Civil War" and "Nuer Prophets", which was awarded the Royal Anthropological Institute's Amaury Talbot Prize.

Together these five experts comprised an extraordinarily impressive group of specialists in a range of complementary disciplines. Those disciplines included African and particularly Sudanese history, law, politics and ethnography. Together the five men had 150 years of professional experience in Sudan and, more generally, East Africa. By the parties' agreement, three of the experts were chosen by the IGAD, an African institution chosen and trusted by the two African parties. The three experts that the IGAD selected were African in ethnicity, nationality and professional experience. The other two experts, Ambassador Petterson and Dr Johnson, were not African by heritage, but they had devoted their entire professional lives to the African continent, and they were pre-eminent authorities on those subjects. The ABC chairman, Ambassador Petterson, then said: "I have always assumed that scientific research/data

Nothing in the work programme was meant to prevent or restrict that research. As we've seen, the experts' investigatory authority was not accidental; it was a vital characteristic of the ABC process. The parties specifically granted the experts wide power independently to conduct scientific fact-finding necessary for their decision. Although that's different from many international arbitral proceedings, it was a fundamental feature of the ABC procedure, as deliberately designed by the parties. Given these terms of the ABC proceedings, and the investigatory character of those proceedings, the Government's complaints about the Khartoum meetings are hopeless. The parties' agreements imposed no prohibition on the experts' authority to meet with third parties. To the contrary, the parties' agreements specifically recognised the experts' freedom to meet independently with any member of the public, wherever they wished, and to investigate whatever other sources of information they wished as part of their broader investigative authority. Moreover, it is clear that the experts, who drafted	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24	parties and the specific subject of the Khartoum interviews with the SPLM/A and the Government delegations, and there was no objection by either party. That is clearly evidenced by both contemporaneous transcripts and reliable witness testimony. In connection with the parties' initial presentations to the ABC, an issue arose with respect to the nature of the experts' scientific research, which we've already discussed. The SPLM/A delegation then said very clearly that the experts would be free to interview witnesses. Minister Deng Alor said, and I quote, and this is on the verbatim transcripts: "There is nowhere in the agreement or in the mandate where there are conditions at all Of course, we all agree that the whole thing should be based on scientific research It is research whether you talk to people or whether you consult references. It is all research." There was no objection to that statement. That statement stated the obvious truth. That's what the provisions that I referred to previously say. The ABC chairman, Ambassador Petterson, then said: "I have always assumed that scientific research/data done on a scientific basis includes oral testimony. The whole gamut of coming to a scientific conclusion

15	It's therefore not surprising that the Government's	15	This is an academic point because it is so clear

These provisions make it clear that it was the five experts, and not the partisan party representatives on the Commission also acting as legal teams for the two sides, who were assigned to determine the Rules of Procedure, to conduct the independent investigations, to decide the parties' dispute and to prepare the ABC report. The Government's complaint is that the experts violated Article 14 of the Rules of Procedure. According to the Government, or at least to what the Government says now, the experts violated Article 14 by falling to submit their draft report to the full Commission before presenting it to the President of Sudan.

Let's look at the entry for May 28th: "The ABC [the full Commission now] travels to Khartoum for the presentation of the final report." Note that the Programme of Work did not provide that the ABC was to travel to Khartoum, to "discuss a draft report" or "comment on the final draft report" or "try and seek a consensus". Rather the Programme of Work provided that the ABC members, all of them, were to travel to Khartoum for the presentation of the final report which, between May 20th and 26th, the experts had prepared on their own. Then on May 29th: "The experts present, in the presence of the whole membership of the ABC, their final report to the presidency." Thus after the entire ABC had travelled to and arrived in Khartoum, the experts were to present their, not the Commission's, final report, not a draft report, to the presidency, in the presence of the whole membership of the ABC.

That is the plain meaning of the words "will endeavour", and indeed the Government concedes this in its rejoinder, saying that it is certainly true that Article 14 sensibly contemplates only reasonable efforts by the Commission. Thus, even if we just looked at Article 14 of the Rules of Procedure completely in a vacuum, as the Government would like us to do, the provision does not require any particular or mandatory procedures by the experts prior to submitting their final report. Specifically, Article 14 says nothing about/imposes no requirement that the experts circulate a draft report or have a final meeting of the Commission. Rather, Article 14 does nothing more than provide for reasonable efforts by the Commission as a whole to try and reach a consensus. That was a sensible common-sense way of approaching the problem. In a nutshell the Government claimed then, as now, that: " the only area transferred from Bahr el Ghazal to Kordofan in 1905 was a strip of land south of the Bahr el Arab/Kiir". For its part the SPLM/A claimed then, as now, that: "The Ngok Dinka have established historical claims to an area extending from the existing Kordofan/Bahr el Ghazal boundary north to the Ragaba ez Zarga/Ngol and that the boundary should be run in a straight line along latitude 10°35' north." Again, there can be no doubt that the experts understood from the parties' submissions their respective positions on the definition and demarcation of the Abyei Area, as referred to in Article 1.1.2 of

The Government claims that this passage shows that the experts refused to answer the question put to them. That is baseless. Preliminarily it is notable that the Government's principal basis for claiming that the experts refused to answer their mandate is a two-sentence snippet from one appendix to the 45-page ABC report. If the experts had in fact refused to answer the question that was put to them, one could presumably find that refusal in the body of their report or on the map of the Abyei Area attached	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23	Equally, there are no grounds for criticising the experts' statement that since there was no map of Ngok territory in 1905, the experts would need to ascertain the extent of Ngok Dinka's occupation and use of territory. That is not a refusal by the experts to address the issue presented to them; instead it is a forthright statement by the experts that they would need to address the question of land use in the course of deciding the issue that was put to them. In sum, there is no basis at all for the Government's first excess of substantive mandate claim, alleging that the experts failed to answer the right question. On the contrary, the experts meticulously answered exactly the question put to them, namely "to define and demarcate the area of the nine Ngok Dinka chiefdoms transferred to Kordofan in 1905". The Government's real complaint is not that the experts failed to answer that question, which they so clearly did, but that they supposedly answered the question in the wrong way. And consistent with their interpretation of Article 1.1.2 of the Abyei Protocol, the experts analysed the facts to determine, in their words, "as accurately as possible" the area of the nine Ngok Dinka chiefdoms as it was in 1905. That was more than enough to satisfy the Government's demand that the experts provide a reasoned decision on all crucial points. The Government may disagree with the experts' conclusions and argumentation, but the inescapable reality is that the ABC report set forth reasoning to support the experts' definition and delimitation of the Abyei Area. Defining the Abyei Area was the experts' mandate, and they provided reasoning explaining how they did so. The Government nonetheless pretends to identify "two illustrations" of the experts' supposed failure to provide reasons. And we heard various iterations of this, at least so far as I could follow, yesterday. The first: the rejection of the Bahr el Arab as the

The experts' report noted correctly that there was substantial geographic confusion about the identity and location of the river called the Bahr el Arab at the time of the 1905 transfer of the Ngok Dinka. I would note that this is an issue that the experts identified, a historical point that they identified on their own, without the assistance of the parties. It	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21	the provincial boundary would not be an absence of reasoning but an error of substance, which is not grounds for invalidating the ABC report. In any case, the Government's criticism on this point of the experts' reasoning is wrong substantively and it's wrong because the experts also explained quite clearly what it is their analysis was. First, the experts did not accept the Government's argument that the Abyei Area must be defined as only that area south of the Kordofan/Bahr el Ghazal boundary. Instead, as we have seen, as I've discussed at some length, the experts stated at the outset of their report that they defined the Abyei Area as "the area of the nine Ngok Dinka chiefdoms as it was in 1905". This was the same interpretation of the Abyei Area, definition of the Abyei Area, that the experts had consistently used throughout the ABC proceedings. We can see it on the current slide again. As we're going to see tomorrow, it was exactly the right definition. Applying this definition, the location of the

Other authorities are to the same effect. I'm not going to go thoroughly through the next slides, but the same is true in Argentina; you can see it in the slide. It is confirmed in the current International Guide to Arbitration in Argentina. Note on the slide that the term "equidad" used in the original Argentinean text is translated as "ex aequo et bono". I will come back to that. Next, the law of El Salvador is the same. Then the law of Panama is similar. Other Latin American legislation is to the same effect. In each case they use the term "equidad" referring to ex aequo et bono. Other national legislation is similar, and it stands squarely in the path of the Government's effort to create a universal peremptory rule. Indeed, when you come to dispute resolution regimes that are more closely analogous to the ABC, ex aequo et bono decisions are even more commonly permitted. That includes the 1926 General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes and the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes. You can look on the current slides, I don't	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24	principles. Indeed the logical predicate for the Government's ex aequo et bono argument is that the experts were required to consider legal principles. In any case, insofar as the experts concluded that it was relevant to consider issues of land rights, the status of boundaries or other legal matters, the parties' agreements left them entirely free to do so. There was nothing in the parties' agreements that required the experts to specify the source of the legal principles that they applied. Certainly many national court judgments and arbitral awards apply legal principles without identifying their precise source, and in any event the experts did cite to authority in a way that would make Law Review editors quite proud. Finally, and in any event, the experts referred specifically to the nature of the principles that they applied, they referred to the law in "former British colonies and protectorates, including Sudan (a Condominium)" and "Sudan" at the "time of the Condominium". It's not surprising that the experts cited meticulously to applicable law. One of the five experts, as we have seen, Professor Gutto, knows more

As the ABC report explained: "The SPLM/A's sketch map of the Abyei Area places the northern boundary at latitude 10°35 running from the current Darfur boundary in a straight line east to approximately longitude 29°32'15" east." In response the Government did not put forth any alternative arguments but instead advanced only its primary claim that the Abyei Area was located entirely south of the Kiir; that is, the Government offered no evidence and made no claims regarding where the eastern boundary of the Abyei Area should lie if the experts concluded that the northern boundary was above the Kiir. Given this, it's perfectly understandable that the	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22	The dogleg which the experts adopted was drawn by extending the existing line and you can see this on the current slide of the Kordofan/Upper Nile boundary, down at the bottom, at longitude 29°32'15" east due north, to intersect with latitude 10°22'30". You can see that on the current slide just at the point where the Kordofan Upper Nile boundary makes a roughly 60-degree turn to the north-east. The resulting perpendicular line, which you can now see dotted on the slide, drawn north from the existing Kordofan/Upper Nile boundary, provides a completely neutral explanation for the eastern boundary of the Abyei Area. It's not that the experts had some secret desire to include oilfields or something else inside the Abyei Area; it's because the existing Upper Nile/Kordofan boundary provided a perfectly logical way to draw the boundary. Moreover, the evidence in the ABC proceedings established that in 1905 the Ngok were located in areas very close to the 29°32'15" east line. In particular, the evidence which we're going to look at in the next

In any case, if you look carefully at the report, or even not too carefully, the Government's speculation is completely wrong. 2	false when you read the interview. All Dr Johnson says	2
3	is that where the line of the Abyei Area was drawn,	3
4	where the boundaries were drawn would have an effect on	4
5	the oil resources.	5
6	That was obvious. It is as clear as day that where	6
7	the experts drew the line would have an effect on the	7
8	allocation of the oil resources. Observing that point	8
9	in no way suggests partiality one way or the other.	9
10	In fact, the only time that oil resources were	10
11	mentioned in the presentations to the ABC was by	11
12	Ambassador Dirdeiry, who said exactly what Dr Johnson	12
13	said in the Government's presentation to the experts.	13
14	He said and you can see this on the current slide:	14
15	"The experts' decision is very important because so	15
16	many rights, including oil rights and other rights, will	16
17	in fact be treated according to what we are going to	17
18	establish."	18
19	Ambassador Dirdeiry made these comments. Dr Johnson	19
20	made no different comments. As was previously pointed	20
21	out indeed in the Government's explanation, there wasn't	21
22	even evidence about where the oilfields were located in	22
23	front of the ABC experts. The suggestion that there was	23
24	some kind of improper hidden motive here is a complete	24
25	smokescreen.	25
